Course Description :

This course is the first clinical course designed to expose students to nursing as a field of practice. Through providing them with the laboratory guided experiences, and self learning practice, students are expected to perform and master certain psychomotor skills such as basic hygiene, vital signs, nutrition, oxygenation, infection control, medication and charting and documentation. These basic introductory skills are presented according to the functional health patterns that are in parallel with the knowledge provided for students in the theory course (1001111) and through the application of the nursing process.
