

Teaching type	Credit hours(3)	Urban Planning and Housing	course number
face-to-face	pre-requisite 703454		703555
Examine the factors on which the overall planning process is based on. The city development and its components as an organic unit with interconnected members and integrated functions, study urban planning approaches and methods to reorganize the old areas and provide them with social and basic services. Presenting housing theories in terms of design and planning, focusing on social, cultural, behavioral and environmental theories, and the importance of the role of construction and financing to understand and guide housing strategies and planning to afford housing for all society sectors. Also, presenting local and international case studies and activating the local field study to deepen the concept of analyzing the cultural content of housing.			